

The day before, delivery prices on Thursday, May 12, 2022, on electricity exchanges in Southeast Europe ranged from 208.25 euros per MWh in Slovenia and Croatia to 227.76 euros per MWh in Greece.

The spot price on the Serbian stock exchange SEEPEX on Thursday was reduced by 8 euros compared to Wednesday, to 217.7 euros per MWh.

The Bulgarian, Romanian and Hungarian markets crashed on Thursday, with a price of 218.79 euros per MWh. That is 50 euros less than on Wednesday.

On the Slovenian and Croatian stock exchanges, the spot price on Thursday is 208.25 euros per MWh, which is about 3 euros more than on Wednesday.

The Greek price was reduced by 12 euros in one day, to 227.76 euros per MWh on Thursday.

According to EPEX SPOT, day-ahead prices in Central and Western Europe on Thursday range from 108.24 euros per MWh in Poland to 202.14 euros per MWh in Switzerland.